"Ti*bet Bells" or "Gong Song"), is a tribute to the Tibetan tradition of sounding drums during religious ceremonies in their native region of eastern Asia, using 400 gong rods instead of drums. A studio version of the song, featuring a distorted kick drum, was released on the Songs About Food and Other Stories EP. The group also released a live recording of the song, recorded at the V Festival in 2001, as a B-side on the "I Like to Move It" single. Muse The Chemical Brothers also have noted musical influences from British electronic band Muse, for which their song "Plug In Baby" (from the Amnesiac album) was featured as a B-side on their single "I Like to Move It", released in 2002. Muse later covered the song on their album live from Istanbul, Turkey in 2006, as a performance-only bonus. The Chemical Brothers were part of the second lineup of Muse at Live Earth, playing a part in the encore for "The Time Is Come" and "Plug In Baby". Dreamland In 2005, The Chemical Brothers released their first live album, Dreamland, which was recorded during their first ever American tour, consisting of their 1996 debut album Intense, and their debut single, "Ti*betan Bells", played live from that show.
