Cell-mediated immunity to cytomegalovirus: in vitro stimulation with virus-infected fibroblasts and interferon. The effect of interferon (IFN) on cell-mediated immunity (CMI) to human cytomegalovirus (HCMV) has been investigated by assaying the delayed hypersensitivity of murine lymphocytes after in vitro stimulation with virus-infected fibroblasts (VIF). The results indicate that the IFN-induced inhibition of CMI to HCMV is not due to a direct effect on virus-specific T cells, but to a down-regulation of both cell and humoral immune mechanisms. Characterization of a novel series of N-methacryloyloxyhydroxylamino acid ester-modified methacrylate resins with variable crosslinking in dental resin composites. This study aimed to evaluate the effect of N-methacryloyloxyhydroxylamino acid esters (MHA) on the viscosity, compressive strength, translucency, and the ratio of weight of the filler to weight of the polymer in composite resins. Two commercially available methacrylate resins (Ramicro) were modified by the addition of different MHA esters and cured using a visible light photoinitiator, TriVex 355. The MHA was added to resins in varying proportions to obtain a final concentration of 3-5 wt %. The viscosity of the composites was determined at 25°C. The compressive strength was measured at 24 h, 6 months, and 1 year, and the translucency was assessed using a spectrophotometer. The polymerization time of the composite with MHA was determined by light curing. The weight of the filler was calculated using the difference between the weight of the uncured resin and the cured resin. The MHA composites had lower viscosity (P
