High-speed processors such as the Intel Pentium 4 are increasing the bus clock frequency and the number of memory devices in a processor memory subsystem. Therefore, the number of devices accessing the memory subsystem is increasing. Consequently, data transfer efficiency and throughput are becoming a larger issue. A processor memory subsystem has a memory controller to receive and send data between a processor and a system memory. Some memory subsystems allow additional devices to access the memory controllers to enhance the memory subsystem performance. In addition, memory systems that allow multiple devices to access memory controllers can improve the data transfer efficiency. An example of a memory subsystem that supports multiple devices is the Synchronous Dynamic Random Access Memory (S
