Luise Neumann Luise Neumann (born 14 September 1858 in Berlin; died 11 April 1887 in Leipzig) was a German actress. Luise Neumann was born to the court orchestra of the Russian embassy in Berlin. Her father Ludwig Neumann was a well-known concert pianist and a famous teacher in Berlin and Munich. He worked as a concert pianist, an organist, and a teacher at the Berlin Conservatory. His son Heinrich was a famous bass-baritone singer. Neumann's mother was the famous opera singer Lisette Maclure. She was a singer and actress and the elder sister of Ludwig Neumann's wife. Neumann debuted as an opera singer in 1875. She then started studying law at the University of Berlin. She gave up that career a year later and turned to acting. Her first appearance was at the Berlin Volkstheater in 1879. On 13 December 1880, Neumann married the theater director Friedrich Ruppert. The marriage however was not a happy one. Her husband, who was already unfaithful to her, regularly spent evenings away from home. Neumann found herself in turmoil and ended the marriage the following year. Neumann returned to Berlin and worked at the Olympia Theatre. Her greatest success came in the title role of Rosalinde. She played that role at the Stadttheater in Leipzig and in November 1884 at the Städtische Theater in Berlin. Luise Neumann died in her apartment in Leipzig on 11 April 1887. She was 31 years old. 3da54e8ca3
