Computer hardware and software can stop working correctly due to different reasons.

Problems, they do not necessarily occur immediately. Sooner or later, they will manifest themselves in various forms, be it just some slowdown or freezing of the system, or a complete system crash. There are various methods that you can use to tackle such problems. First of all, you can do some basic maintenance to the system. Rebuild, update, install and repair your computer, but be sure to have a back-up of all your personal information before starting. If this does not help and the system is still sluggish, it may be time to take the system apart and to clean its parts. You can use some cleaner to get rid of dust, and if there is a need, you can also replace any broken component. You can also replace the motherboard, which is the main base of the computer. There are also several software tools that you can

A: Nero Photo Express is a free version of Nero Burning ROM. If you are fine with the free version you can get a lot more of features out of it than you would get from the paid version. It also comes with an ability to remove metadata from an image in addition to batch renaming. You can use the Wizard and it will guide you through the process of making a backup of your images and organizing them in folders. With the configuration of the software you can enable backups and organize them by year, month, or date. Clean & Green Startups Is Changing the World and Selling Coffee, too. First up: the iced coffee. It's one of the rare beverages that can cross culinary boundaries—and in this case, it goes from the coffee shop to the desk and car. The startup, founded by James Edward Wright III and Tracy Wilson of New Orleans, has created the five-ounce iced coffee thermos—a 24-ounce plastic container that has a base and top that keep coffee warm while you’re driving or toiling away at work. The team got the idea for the thermos from coffee shops where the barista would pour an iced coffee into a cup and place it on top of a cup filled with ice. Wright and Wilson came up with a few different prototypes, including a drinking can, before settling on the thermos. They also considered the cup carafe, which is a heavy-duty travel mug with a stand that holds a cup in place while keeping it warm. “Coffee is already affordable in America and we know many Americans are having iced coffee for lunch or in the mornings while they are driving,” says Wright. “This product is more affordable than the iced coffee that most people are accustomed to.” The problem with the current industry coffee delivery models is that it requires a bulky, hot mug or lid that you have to drink out of, says Wright. “The innovation is what we call the ‘stealth coffee,’” he explains. “It’s not the original cup that most people are accustomed to drinking out of. When you get a bag of coffee at a coffee shop, you have to have a lid for that coffee to stay warm. The lid is the top. Our goal is to design the stealth cup, which is the iced
