close? A: There was an edit of the question, which is what the vote's reverted to. Edits aren't supposed to be rolled back, so that's why it's gone back to the original. The votes to close are still in place, and have not been retracted by moderators. (The mods see all these votes, and try not to be too overzealous or hasty.) A: The question, as originally posted, was: How to view and close all questions without the 'on hold' tab? You've voted to close it as very low quality. The poster then edited the question to say: How to view and close all questions without the 'on hold' tab? You then proceeded to cast three close votes on it, all of which were subsequently retracted by the moderators. It was not because the quality of the question had changed in any way. I'm personally not very happy about having to undo a vote, but it was in the best interests of the site and the poster to have it like this. A: Mods need to see three "Leave Open" votes and agree that the question is not off topic, or that an edit is not an attempt to cast a vote to close and reopen the question, before they will do so. When they come to this case, they agreed that the question was fine as it was, and updated the original vote that had been cast to "Leave Open" to "Unclear what you're asking", while still leaving the original close votes in place. Off Grid
In the last few years the concept of using solar power to take charge of our energy supply has been developing rapidly. Photovoltaics (PV), or solar power, has great potential to solve many issues faced by the world today. It can be used for heating and cooling, generating electricity and even providing drinking water. However, there are some reasons why solar power hasn't been able to fully grow in its contribution to our electricity supply to date. Firstly, it can only be used to produce electricity, for example, if you want it for your laptop to work you need a battery or plug. Secondly, it's not as efficient as a central power supply. So, what can we do to really make solar power a viable alternative to our current energy source?

Introducing Off Grid – an industry leading platform dedicated to providing the best in off-grid power solutions for demanding environments. Off Grid was launched by the world leading Off Grid Power Systems company Kumpare in early 2017, with an aim to become a step change in off-grid technology. Our team of experts in electricity, construction and electrical engineering have spent the last few years creating a state-of-the-art platform with a system design that will become a hallmark for the future of off-grid power. You can read more about it at You know Off Grid is the “right” platform when you can leverage the power of the team, having a personal touch with everyone in the company, everything is designed, developed and tested by the team and because of our global focus our systems can be built offshore with our global partners. Our first set of systems, developed in partnership with Kumpare, is a multi-wind
